VaultScribe™ allows the transfer of highly confidential attorney-client privilege communication via e-mail over the Internet by eliminating the risk of interception and tracing, as well as risking viral infections from attachments.

While the Internet spawned rapid, easily accessible communication, it's also presented challenges for legal professionals who routinely exchange highly sensitive materials. E-mails traveling over the Internet circulate through numerous computers before reaching the intended recipient. At any point, a message in transit can be intercepted and read by anyone.

"There is no doubt about it – sending private information via the Internet is risky business," says Carol Duke of VaultScribe Secure Email, LP, a company that offers innovative security solutions. "People [attorneys] need a way to communicate confidentially in this highly wired world using a trustworthy, credible connection."

ELIMINATE SPAMMING

VaultScribe™ is a secure channel that will not only give you the confidence that any sent or received e-mail is read only by the intended recipient, but it will eliminate any forwarding or spamming. "Spamming is more of a concern than most people realize," says Duke. "Not only is it annoying, it can be dangerous."

VaultScribe™ integrates with existing e-mail programs such as Microsoft® Outlook® and other popular email programs.

You can add a client at any time during a case and simply delete the mailbox once the work is concluded.

As a subscriber, you may end your service at any time by easily deleting all mailboxes.
